

Let's take the scene towards the start of Part 3, when the Doctor and Earl are outside the Forum and pretend to be happy in order to avoid being arrested by the Happiness Patrol. Full of laughter, the Doctor steps forward, and takes Daisy K firmly by the wrist. He leads her back to the Forum steps and, guffawing all the time, turns her over his knee and folds back her mini-skirt. Daisy is then on the receiving end of a very sound spanking. The downtrodden killjoys watch with delight as each firm slap lands on her pink panties, greeted with a wail of outrage. The Patrol is powerless to intervene because, as the Doctor stresses, the only one who is unhappy is Daisy - and the Patrol duly arrests their weeping former commander when the punishment is over.

A mass spanking for the Happiness Patrol would make a suitable climax to the episode, I think. The naughty girls deserve it for painting the TARDIS pink. But that does beg the question of whether the Doctor should deal with Helen A in the same manner...
